The Last Lecture

Rachel Cronk

Randy Paush's "Last Lecture" is one of the most impactful speeches I have ever listened to. His words convey the importance of imagination, effort, continuance, family, life, and more. I have experienced similar situations. Like Randy, I have tried to accomplish things I couldn't, and I learned more from failing than I would have from succeeding. I have accomplished many of my child dreams, and have found greater accomplishment in things I would never have even imagined as a child. I have had many mentors and people come along in my life, and encourage me to try things I would never have even dreamed of pursuing. These pursuits have now become passions, and I thank these people. I do what I can to push this encouragement forward, and guide others to find and pursue their own passions, to lead their own life to greatness despite the obstacles.
